The Elms and Green

The grand old Elms that shade the green,
And arch the drive that runs between

Majestic rise,
'Tis pleasant in this shade to rest
From running match the strength to test
For athletes prize.

Shades classical, historic, dear,
Ancestral heroes planted here
Long years ago.
Prophetic souls! the future spread
For them bright as these limbs overhead
In sunny glow.

Here Franklin's elm the town pump shades,
That living spring where rustic maids
Colonial came.
God-fearing men here planted well
Acty fair—their histories tell
Of zeal aflame.

John Davenport first minister
Eaton with Jones first governor
From England came -

About two centuries ago
Was founded Yale to live and grow
With brightening fame.

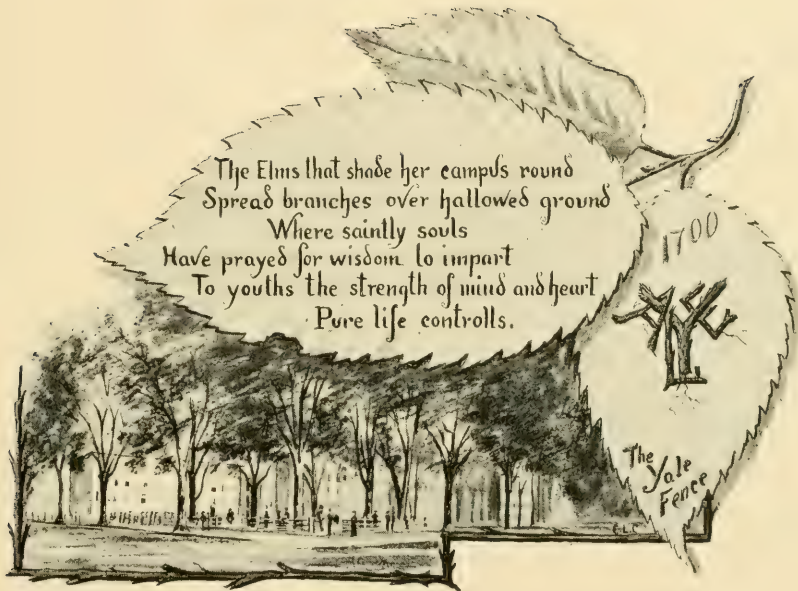

Her massive walls now rise and tower
A University of power
Whose influence sways

Her sons in legislative halls,
In all the walks where duty calls
In fateful days.

The Elms that shade her campus round
Spread branches over hallowed ground
Where saintly souls
Have prayed for wisdom to impart
To youths the strength of mind and heart
Pure life contralls.

On Sabbath eve to muse and dream
 Neath living arches till they seem
 Cathedral aisles.

Not made with hands its columns rise
 Its dome the heaven of star-lil skies
 With earthward smiles.

Now soft, now loud, the cadence swells
 From Trinity's sweet chime of bells
 Some sacred air
 Some anthem grand or song of praise
 With melody the soul to raise
 On wings of prayer.
